

Research Paper on Venezuelan Migration to Trinidad and Tobago - MYP Personal Project Final Report

A: PLANNING

A.1: Deciding the Product and Preliminary Plan

Learning Goal: “To learn about the complexities and the phenomena behind Venezuelan migration to Trinidad and Tobago.”

I’m a Hispanic student who has lived in Spanish speaking countries like Spain, Mexico, Colombia, Panama, and now Trinidad for the past 14 years of my life. Here in Trinidad, it has constantly reappeared in my life through meeting key individuals like my housekeeper, community centers, and children in local education centers around the country like Huellitas de Amor. I formed this learning goal considering I had never delved into its significance regardless of the hundreds of times that I’ve witnessed it.

Ever since my time in Bogota, Colombia, in the year 2019, I have seen news and heard about the Venezuelan crisis involving their mass migration, the presidency of the ruthless Nicolas Maduro, and the thousands that were arriving in Colombia and struggling and begging for money and food in the streets with cardboard letters, posting videos of their suffering in social media, and laying down with their humble businesses within the city. Before my project, I had only known about their economic deficit, and didn’t see the other factors constructing the crisis like politics, crime, xenophobia, and social issues against them.

One story that hit me hard in the chest was when my mother showed me one of these online videos showing the sorrows of a Venezuelan mother in Colombia, crying that she didn’t have diapers or the essential resources to provide for her baby. It was brutal to me and made me think even further about the situation in Venezuela. Speaking of families, in Trinidad I had heard many stories from my housekeeper, Mariana, who had not seen her children in her homeland for years and one of them had even passed away recently from a gang attack.

Not to mention, my older brother had friends in our primary school when we lived in Bogota, Colombia; quadruplets from there, where he told me a story about them being refugees from persecution due to their father, Mr. Gorgez (not his real surname but private) running for president and being a threat to Nicolas Maduro’s loss of his office position. Witnessing these tragic and emotionally connecting stories from people of similar culture to me is what drove me to learn about this topic in some aspect. It required me to start an initiative to investigate their most relevant and impactful issues through nearby sources, through the place that I lived, through Trinidad and Tobago.

In one way, I wanted to help this community of individuals as I’ve desired to step up and make a change in people’s lives even if it's certainly minor. I want to contribute to those who don’t have the same benefits as myself and want to improve the lives of communities in dire need by educating them about the relevance of this phenomenon.

(F stands for Figure) F1. Upper Left: Poster for Book Donation Project, F2. Lower Left: The Children’s Library, F3. Middle Right: Book Collecting Box with Poster in School Library)

Initially, my project was going to be a cluster of community service projects for a Venezuelan cultural center for refugees located in Arima borough of Trinidad called La Casita, where I would organize fundraisers, events, and donations to them. Thus, I attempted to make an initial book donation from my school by creating a poster in Canva to bring awareness (F1) to the children’s library in the Venezuelan cultural center (F2). I sent messages to group chats to advertise and encourage students to place children’s books on the box (F3) in order to deliver them to the library of the Venezuelan center in order to facilitate their experience of learning English. I was confident about my work here, but I didn’t really see changes in how I saw the crisis in Trinidad and Tobago. When contacting the founder

The diagram illustrates the digestive system with the following components and processes:

- Mouth: The starting point of digestion, where food enters.
- Salivary Glands: Located near the mouth, they secrete saliva into the oral cavity.
- Stomach: The food moves here for further digestion. The process is labeled "Digestion".
- Liver and Gallbladder: The liver produces bile, which is stored in the gallbladder and then released into the small intestine to aid in digestion.
- Pancreas: The pancreas secretes pancreatic juice into the small intestine to assist in the breakdown of food.
- Small Intestine: The primary site for digestion and absorption. The process is labeled "Digestion" and "Absorption".
- Large Intestine: The undigested food moves here, where water is absorbed. The process is labeled "Absorption".
- Anus: The final exit point for waste from the digestive system.

Thus, I discussed it with my father, and we concluded that an academic, expansive research paper would be able to answer all of my concerns involving the whole phenomena of Venezuelan immigration and integration into the Caribbean islands of Trinidad and Tobago. (F4) The paper would concentrate on the drivers, or the push factors of the Venezuelans, and how they are reflected through their paths, or the issues they go through. We also decided to attempt to continue to reach out to support centers in order to gather information about their necessities for the research paper. Where it says “Entrevistas”, or interviews, I imagined a need for interviews based on the drivers and paths of Venezuelans and placed potential interviewees that I knew.

ATL Skills:	ATL Skills link
Which ATL skill/s do you think you will need to use to help you achieve your specific learning goal ? How might you use each ATL skill identified? Jot an idea down next to each.
- Research - Information Literacy: I will receive information by reading it and writing it down on my report, this skill will be necessary to be effective as it will determine the type, quality and quantity of the information as well as my ability to comprehend and report it on my document. - Media Literacy: Sorting through online sources and professional reports will allow me to tell the difference between objective and biased media. My project needs the most objective information, such as primary sources (interviews, personal experience) and secondary sources (websites, videos, articles).
Which ATL skill/s do you think you will need to use to help you achieve this product/outcome ? How might you use each ATL skill identified? Jot an idea down next to each.
- Social - Collaboration: I will conduct interviews along with key individuals that hold valuable information that I can add to my product. Their assistance will show myself as a leader through my questions while listening to the perspectives and experiences of others. - Self-Management - Organization: I have to set challenging, realistic goals for my product and meet deadlines per each section to ensure that I can achieve this and learn further about my topic by creating a product goal that is extensive and organized enough to learn massively from it.
Overall Goal Statement: formulate a statement that combines both your Learning & Product goal. Begin with,
To learn about the complexities and the phenomena behind Venezuelan migration to Trinidad and Tobago by creating a well-researched analysis of this topic that primarily communicates the challenges they have to face there.

When doing my preliminary plan for this new idea of a project, I imagined a need for my paper to be expansive based on the information that I would find from support

Product Goal: “To publish a well-researched analysis of Venezuelan Integration and Immigration to Trinidad and Tobago that primarily communicates the challenges they have to face there.”

(F6) Based on my goals and initial plans for this project, I developed an identification of Approaches to Learning (ATL) skills that will be applied in my project in order to show growth as an IB learner in research, thinking, self-management, and social areas. Thanks to all of this knowledge, I concluded with my overall goal statement that I would embrace for this project:

Overall Goal Statement: “To learn about the complexities and the phenomena behind Venezuelan migration to Trinidad and Tobago by publishing a well-researched analysis of the challenges Venezuelans face when immigrating and integrating to these islands.”

A.2: SMART Goal / Brainstorming

S (Specific)	What exactly am I going to do? A well-organized academic research paper mainly about Venezuelan immigration and integration to the islands of Trinidad and Tobago. What am I going to learn? The stories, experiences, individuals that are all connected with the process of Venezuelan immigration to Trinidad and Tobago as well as superior researching and analytical skills than before. What do I want to ultimately accomplish? I want to complete a research paper that goes over the largest problems as well as impacts behind the arrival of the Venezuelans to the small Caribbean islands, as well as communicating this paper as a message for those who did not know the entire phenomena and to learn about a great fraction of the hispanic community within this pair of islands while preparing for future academic research paper making by learning how to make one. How am I going to do it? I will create a criteria and a plan based on revising other research papers, imagining the topic's severity as a hypothesis, finding and identifying people to interview, and search websites and potential sites where the paper can be published for people to read and comprehend the message that was implemented on my heavily-investigated research paper.
M (Measurable)	How will I know that I have reached my product goal? When a well-formatted research paper has been completed along with information from interviews, organized citations, and a paper that includes perspectives from Venezuelans, Trinidadians, Activists, and Journalists from Trinidad and Tobago in order to produce a well-analyzed paper that highlights the topic while also concluding on the weight that is the several critical situations involving the Venezuelans here at Trinidad. Some Criteria (based on the general goal) under which this might be explored: 1. Did the Research Paper apply both a great mix of primary and secondary sources? 2. Are extracted sources of information recent enough to be considered a relevant, modern topic? 3. Was there a sufficient or excellent measurement of the impact and the issues with Venezuelan integration to Trinidad? 4. Does it follow the format of an academic research paper by being organized and clear? 5. Did the paper include media like quotations and imagery? 6. Were the interviews conducted well enough to extract valuable information through elaborated and fitting questions? 7. Was the research paper published and well-received by the public?
A (Attainable/Achievable)	Is the goal too difficult to reach? Too easy? Is it challenging enough? The research paper encourages me to take a deeper dive in every topic that I encounter. The areas such as xenophobia, education and economic growth are all different elements that should be considered expansively when developing my paper. It will require the search for valuable information through reliable sources and reading consistently while thinking to make my own analysis. It is challenging and will create time constraints considering the amount of research and thinking skills that will be needed to pour into this project all alone while securing my academics and physical activity at their optimum.
R (Relevant)	Is it linked to something that is important to me or that inspires me? Does it somehow support my vision? There's several connections that I have with Venezuelans as of recent years. As a hispanic in Trinidad and Tobago, the majority of us are of Venezuelan nationality, and I've seen their arrival and the humanitarian crisis there and in Colombia, Panama and now Trinidad for the last six years. As an academic student with high-standards, I want to improve the way I produce research papers while addressing this topic that I've kept at the back of my mind for a long time throughout my experience moving from these countries.
T (Time-bound)	What is the target date for reaching my goal? The research paper should be fully completed and published before February 2025 starts. The paper needs to be filled with loads of research from several sources and analyzed to the best of my ability while also having to contact and find individuals of interest and apply their resourceful information on my paper. Not just this, but the paper needs to be verified and formatted while separating between paragraphs. All of this has to be done while managing my high-standards on academics, my physical activities, and my eventual distractions.

(F7. My SMART Goal Chart)

(F7) My SMART Chart was crucial in developing and highlighting the importance of my Learning and Product Goals at their maximum to understand while allowing me to envision what I want to achieve with his project, which laid the foundation for my product criteria that would come later on. It helped me imagine criteria branches involving the sources, the analysis, the accuracy to an actual research paper, and the interviews and connections I would make with the support centers and the interviews. However, because of growing harsh relationships with support centers and noticing that information would be more valuable to receive from personal interviews, I decided to dedicate further on the latter and leverage on it rather than considering support centers. In a research paper, the difficulty is determined by how deeply one delves into the skills, how much he repeats his researching and thinking skills and thus how much he enhances them. I determined a due date to be all the way until March in order to give myself enough time to add news of more recent times considering I want this paper to be a message of the present and not the past.

(F8. An Extract of Harvard University's the Structure of an Academic Paper from their Writing Center & Communications Lab)

(F8) To achieve the plans I had with my SMART goal, I took inspiration from sources like Harvard's structure for Academic Paper, where they would separate four different sections and give instructions such as applying a hook, how to write paragraphs and convey ideas through research and to write a proper conclusion. It gave very detailed instructions that laid the foundation on how I would organize my paper, how it could be separated through multiple paragraphs and following this structure made by someone within a very prestigious university.

The district is primarily made up of White (63.2%) and Asian (35.5%) students.	Evidence. We may believe this statement, but don't know what it signifies unless the author writes another sentence.
Because the district was primarily White (63%) and Asian (35%), leaders saw no urgent reason to incorporate Black Studies into the curriculum.	Evidence with interpretation/analysis. The author interprets the evidence as relevant to a lack of urgency for Black studies.

(F9. Another Extract of the same source, an example of how bodies work in academic research papers.)

Like how the hourglass in (F8) displays how the paper would be shaped, in terms of quantity, I would state that my whole paper would be like planet Saturn, with the wide body within its vertical center in comparison to the more short upper and lower parts. (F9) According to this source, My body should be separated in various paragraphs through indents from each other and they should all convey the topic sentence, evidence and

Marlon Anatol^a and Quinnelle-Marie Kangalee^b

^aThe University of the West Indies, St. Augustine, Trinidad and Tobago; ^bIndependent Researcher, Trinidad and Tobago

ABSTRACT

Trinidad and Tobago has been subjected to rising crime over the last decade; there is now concern that increased migration from Venezuela will add to this trend, leaving the host government less equipped to deal with the rising phenomenon. The 2019 amnesty granted by the government to undocumented Venezuelan immigrants has been closely related to the socioeconomic and security impact of this migration flow; this has subsequently been transmuted to a rising anti-Venezuelan sentiment in the country. This article seeks to interrogate the real and perceived impact of this influx of Venezuelans on crime and security in Trinidad and Tobago by evaluating media reports and articles on crime and security in the country. The article also examines the crime rate in Trinidad and Tobago. It was noted that the media has contributed to an increasing sentiment of suspicion and paranoia towards Venezuelan immigrants which serves to anecdotally attribute increased crime levels to this group. Further, as there is a dearth of official statistics to differentiate the criminal activities of Venezuelans from those of other immigrants, it is difficult to hard to definitively attribute increases in crime to the migrants. The authors conclude with the presentation of potential policy recommendations to address the issues.

ARTICLE HISTORY

Received 6 October 2019
Accepted 5 August 2020

KEYWORDS

KEYWORDS
Trinidad and Tobago;
migration; security; crime;
Venezuela

(F10. A research paper of the similar topic used as inspiration for structure)

(F10) Also, when checking research papers to plan, I saw the presence of an “Abstract” instead of an introduction. I also saw this as an opportunity to add titles, labels, and other elements in order to ensure the paper is organized at its optimum and it is easy to navigate for those looking for one specific topic in particular.

A.3: Product Criteria

(Criteria Images: F11. 1-2 Limited, F12. 3-4 Adequate, F13. 5-6 Substantial, F14. 7-8 Excellent) (Zoom in to see each criterion respectively)

Grading and Criteria	Research (Criterion A)	Analysis (Criterion B)	Communication (Criterion C)	Interviews (Criterion D)
1-2 Limited	A1. Research needs to be better supported, sources only add up to less than 5. This creates a report that is limited to ideas and likely plagiarized. A2. Research only implements secondary sources, proving the overreliance on subjective ideas. A3. Most if not all Bibliography is poorly and formatted in an unorganized structure, while a lot of important elements in sources like authors and dates do miss out a majority of the time. A4. The paper barely mentions or remarks on any of its sources across the report, clearly demonstrating limited respect towards the information received. A5. Sources belong from a variety of time periods and do not remain on a specific one, delivering a limited message to the audience.	B1. Research Paper only concentrates on 1-2 problems relating to Venezuelan migration to Trinidad. This shows limitations in learning the true details behind this significant topic. B2. Only one side of the whole phenomena is seen, whether it's the Trinidadians or the Venezuelans. There is a limited amount of respect for one of these two sides. B3. The paper is limited to only outlining evidence gathered, without giving any sort of logical statement, remark, or explanation throughout most evidence within the research report. B4. The paper has introductions and conclusions that are irrelevant and short-written, lacking any logical interpretation of the topic. They both share the same purpose and don't make it successful in attracting readers to the topic. B5. The paper is limited to less than 1000 words, which is a limited amount that briefly outlines and explains the issues.	C1. Paper has an introduction, a one-paragraph body, and a conclusion. This one paragraph is filled with differing information and creates poor, unorganized work. C2. Report applies basic vocabulary, without inspiration from sources to use better language, showing a lack of respect towards the topic. C3. Under 3 pieces of media are applied into the project, developing a project that severely lacks visuals and data, which are critical for the paper to grab attention. C4. The report is not published. It is maintained as a paper that limits attention and is not used to achieve its grand purpose. C5. The public isn't as satisfied with the paper based on its message and text, showing reviews and making comments that imply the paper is limited on satisfying the readers.	D1. Interviews have straight-forward questions that were not planned with research. All Questions are also repeated in every interview regardless of the individuals and are very short in amount. D2. Interviews are only made with 1 or 2 individuals, really limiting the amount of voices. D3. Only one group, such as students, workers, support centers, are given a voice in interviews. D4. The information received from interviews is barely applied, to the point where this limitation did not prove their usefulness. D5. All questions are leading questions, which lead to a project that has too much specified information and likely bias.

To be able to evaluate the success of my product criteria in terms of my learning and product goals, I had to develop a whole criteria for my project in its varying aspects. Thus, with the brainstorming, the inspirations, and the SMART goal, I was able to determine four different criterions that the paper would be graded on:

Research (A), to ensure that the paper applies significant data from recent, reliable, and qualified sources both online and offline while sourcing it correctly. I inclined on research heavily due to how important it is to gather data from the outside and present it at quality to show the paper used various sources to connect information and finalize with the presentation of a very prestigious piece of work.

Analysis (B), to assure the paper analyses upon the research expansively while supporting it to create a message that is powerfully expressed across all areas. It is expected to have both quality and quantity for maximum detail of impactful information for the readers. I created this criteria for it to dive as deep in terms of the topics, stories, individuals, and overall information as much as possible with the time set on the SMART goal for this product. To write my expectations, I had even asked my classmate who was really hard-working the amount of words she had for her book product, in which she implied it was around 8,000 words, (F14) which only had me adding I would exceed that at an excellent standard (10,000 words). Of course, a book and a research paper aren't the same, but I had to pour a great amount of hard work into my project.

Communication (C), to have the paper follow the format and structure of the average academic research paper while also publishing it and receiving feedback from readers. The paper would have to include elements like proper vocabulary, separate paragraphs, and images or any sort of media. Reading a research paper that aspires to be quantitative like this one can be frustrating at times, which said emotion can be mitigated if the paper applied an adaptable and accessible organization while incorporating interesting outside information with an identifiable application like italics for quotations or visual images. It needs to be able to receive results through responses, which will assure the paper is of interest to the general public.

3-4	Adequate	A1. The source amount lies between 5-20, providing an adequate number of sources, and creating a report that relies on an average number of ideas. A2. Research mostly applies secondary sources, although there is bare evidence derived from primary sources, with around 10% of sources being primary. A3. Research is adequately structured in the bibliography, while having a handful of sources, about 20%, in complete detail (name, date, publisher...), showing further accuracy. A4. The paper does spend 5 occasions respecting and mentioning the sources of information. This makes it adequately clear that research was made on reliable sources. A5. Research is from times that go at least under 10 years, which is of recent times, managing to develop an adequately accurate report based on time.	B1. Report conducts research on 3-4 problems relating to the crisis of Venezuelan migration to Trinidad. An adequate amount of research was clearly conducted. B2. Research paper acknowledges views from both sides, although remains showing bias by preferring one over the other while not delving deeper into the individuals and their roles themselves. B3. The report adequately remarks and mostly offers logical statements about evidence. There is a bare connection between explanations, the evidence, and the points. B4. The report produces an introduction that slightly brings attention to the rest of the topic, and produces a conclusion that serves as a brief summary to all of the points analyzed in the document. B5. The report only passes a word count of 3,000 words, an adequate amount to outline and explain the issues at hand.	C1. The paper adequately separates itself in a variety of paragraphs, with one for an introduction, three for the body, and one for the conclusion. It shows that the paper organizes information by a respectable amount. C2. Vocabulary is inspired by the various sources researched, although retains basic wording and punctuation in the long-term. C3. 10 pieces of media are applied to the project, where it is clear enough and attracts enough viewers. C4. Report is published but only made aware of in the school's campus and websites, it grabs attention from students, teachers, and parents, although limits to that and barely achieves its goal. C5. The paper receives some average and/or mixed reviews from the public, which imply the paper adequately satisfies or angers some of the audiences in the paper.	D1. There is an adequate amount of research conducted for each question, although still not sufficiently planned. Questions go up to 5, and they barely vary between each individual interview. D2. Interviews are conducted with 3 people, showing slight amounts of people partaking in responding to questions for the research paper. D3. There is variety in the amount of people interviewed, with two groups being present at most. This allows for many views to be evident. D4. The information from interviews is vaguely applied, but given short statements as analysis, which proves adequate usefulness. Interviews are only applied about 3 times. D5. The majority of questions are leading, although there is an adequate amount of open-ended and closed questions. This allows for the inclusion of simple, objective answers.
-----	----------	--	---	---	---

Interviews (D), which are the main primary sources for the paper and they are conducted with individuals of different areas and stories to understand the topic at a more personal level while creating a more reliable research paper. The reason why I picked the interviews for my last criteria is to give them more importance considering the likelihood that I would rely on secondary sources considering my use of a browser to scout for additional information. They will become the dependent variable for the level of my paper's reliability.

The criteria went up to different 20 strands due to leverage of the different criterias and how they could be expanded

5-6 Substantial	A1. Research derives from 21-40 sources, creating a project that flourishes with a substantial number of ideas applied to a well-made project. A2. Research creates a closer mix between Primary and Secondary sources with a bare difference. Approximately 25% of sources are primary, showing the large contribution of original ideas to the product. A3. The bibliography has research sources labeled, with between 40%-50% pieces being complete with detail, showing a proper list of accurate sources to assist on the research paper. Bibliography is formatted properly thanks to italics and underlines. A4. The research report substantially respects its sources, with about 10 research sources being mentioned, and even briefly explained at points to make the audience aware of what reliable source they read this on. A5. Sources do not exceed 5 years of age for a majority of the time, crafting a sufficiently accurate paper in terms of relevance.	B1. The report goes up to expansively analyze 5 of the most notable problems of Venezuelan migration to TT. It's substantial enough to create a solid, well-researched report. B2. Research paper successfully respects both sides and establishes itself as an objective piece of work. However, it doesn't consider the opinions and perspectives of differing groups as sufficiently. B3. Explanations towards evidence are expansive and do make connections with the overall topic, while also responding to other evidence within the same explanations. B4. The introduction answers a few initial questions one would have about the topic, as well as explaining the paper. The conclusion sufficiently analyzes the points discussed, the evidence presented, and ensures that the purpose of the paper is achieved at slightest. B5. The paper sufficiently passes a word count of 7,000 words, which should be detailed enough to explain and analyze all of the issues remarked on the paper.	C1. The paper is sufficiently separated into several paragraphs, where the introduction goes for two, the body paragraph for five, and the conclusion for two. This is organized enough to separate information. C2. Vocabulary applied is rich, and heavily inspired from the sources applied. Basic words are attempted to be replaced with more professional vocabulary to add more weight into the topic. C3. Media goes up to about 20 total, producing a project that is properly factual and well-developed in communicating evidence. C4. Project is published on a website that is viewed by people from Trinidad. It is capable of being viewed by others and develops minor relevance. C5. The paper receives proper and basic reviews that show satisfied readers, which defines the paper as one that is sufficiently successful when it comes to giving detail and has audiences that somewhat agree.	D1. Research is substantially made to back up 8 questions that are genuinely necessary as primary sources of information. Some questions retain quite some similarity between each interview. D2. Interviews are conducted with 5 different individuals, which allow for the project to have enough views towards the issues regarding this topic. D3. Three different groups of interviews are interviewed to create views towards different sides of the topic. D4. Research from these primary sources is applied and used for explanations on 5 occasions. This is substantial in creating implications to support data and information. D5. Half the questions are open-ended, with the rest being a share between closed, follow up, and leading questions.
--------------------	--	---	---	---

7-8 Excellent	A1. Amount of Ideas flourishes from over 41 sources, proving the creation of an excellent project with several ideas that exceed expectations. A2. Research develops an excellent mix of Primary and Secondary sources, with between 40%-60% of sources of information deriving from original ideas. A3. Over 60% of the bibliography ensures that names, dates, and publishers are specified to confirm the knowledge to effectively research reliable sources with excellence. Not only is it properly formatted, but bibliography is also in alphabetical order, establishing a sense of order. A4. The source respects the information received, by giving a proper statement for over 11 sources of information gathered, which mentions nearly every source researched across the text, proving the paper's reliability and use of research further to make it appear as a factual piece of information. A5. The source applies to sources that are mostly under 3 years of age, which allows for the problem to have very strong accuracy and relevance to the paper's topic of a modern problem.	B1. The report excellently analyzes 6 problems or more to demonstrate an insightful understanding of the significant issues of Venezuelan migration in Trinidad and Tobago. B2. The research paper goes towards an absolute objective approach by remarking and analyzing views each based on the individuals where they came from. It creates an insightful, reliable and excellent analysis of the perspective of those involved in this topic. B3. Explanations are well-analyzed, and excellently compare data and evidence to each other to develop factual text that properly underscores the significance of the topic. B4. An introduction is structured in a way where it provides a factual analysis of the report that grabs the attention of readers by answering as many initial concerns about the topic, and outlining the public's most known parts about the topic. The conclusion expansively and excellently sums up information to educate readers about the significance and why it should be further dedicated towards the Trinidadian people. B5. The paper exceeds an amount of 10,000 words, with all of the issues explained, analyzed, and concluded in expansion and fully answering the message.	C1. The Paper is separated into several paragraphs, with three or more for an introduction, then dedicated to organizing the paragraphs one by another based on the most to least important. Conclusion also has over three paragraphs. It is excellently structured where it keeps the reader interested. C2. Vocabulary in research papers is professional, and highly inspired by sources. It is clear that there are words applied that were never known before, and there is a bare trace of basic language being applied. C3. Media goes beyond 30, proving the dense research conducted and how much attention the report will grab from more pieces of media thanks to sources. C4. The project is published in a website that is highly known in Trinidad, where people from TT visit it every day and it is accessible. In fact, if one were to search "The Phenomena of Venezuelan Migration to Trinidad and Tobago", it would be one of the top choices. C5. The paper manages to convince it's readers to agree and acknowledge the topic based on their majorly positive reviews, which infers that the goal of the paper was achieved.	D1. Research is majorly conducted behind each question, where the most troubling concerns about the topic being part of the questions to get 10 questions that are highly effective for the report. Similarity between questions is undetectable. D2. Over 7 individuals are interviewed to prove the project's factual status considering this is a broad number of individuals that all have different views. D3. Over 4 different groups of individuals are interviewed for this project. This broadens views even further and ensures that everybody is given a voice to support a factual report. D4. Most if not all information from interviews is applied on the report, where it is able to create statistics if a question is repeated to make conclusions about certain sides of the topic. It is able to create more data to develop highly realistic and objective interpretations relating to the topic. D5. Interviews have one if not zero leading questions in total each. Most questions are Open-ended, with both closed and follow-up questions being present as well, allowing useful and objective responses to be applied into the paper.
------------------	--	--	---	--

each with five different strands. (F11-14) However, for this project, I initially had begun with only 16 strands, and I added the fifth strand for each criteria (A, B, C, D) in order to balance them out since I had added a D5 due to my supervisor's feedback to prepare for the interviews. He told me that these interviews had to be done with open-ended questions in order to gather the most valuable information to apply to my research paper. Thus, I had applied this new criteria to ensure that the questions asked would generate answers of use, and soon I envisioned the need for sources that were of more recent times (A5), a highly quantitative paper (B5), and positive views towards the published paper (C5). This first idea flourished in my mind thanks to the introduction of another strand for each criteria to balance and ensure all the criteria were reached at an equal level considering the major difference between the value of a criteria with five strands with one with three or less.

Now that I had a criteria, it was only time for me to use these strands to connect them with both short and long term goals that would construct my step-by-step plan for the completion of my product.

A.4: Product Plan

When adjusting my plan, which was based on the goals set on my criteria as visualized in the related criterion strands, I had placed a key with a handful of highlights: This one showing the pass of a deadline for a short term goal, this one to display a change that happened with that short term goal, where a blue text explains why it happened, and this one to show the short term goals that didn't happen. For this plan, I decided to add time as a factor in order to ensure I was achieving my tasks as a limit and to be able to reflect upon the time that I dedicated to the project's short term goals in my reflection. Adjustments would be in a red color under the dates and times for each short term goal.

(Planner Images: F15. Upper Left: Key & Initial Research & Analysis, F16. Upper Right: Researching and Question Making, F17. Lower Left: Final Research and Interviews, F18. Lower Right: Conclusion and Publishing)

Key:
Incomplete
Changes to Plan
Past Deadline
Adjustments
Comments

*Task Time is how long it should take for a Short Term Goal to achieve from start to finish disregarding any time of irrelevance in between and rounded to the nearest fifth

Long Term Goals	Short Term Goals	Time		Related Criterion Strands	Adjustments/Comments to Project
Start Research and Analysis of Initial Research for Paper	- Online Research and Citing: Briefly go about the Crisis in Venezuela.	November 19th-20th	20 min 40 min	A1, A3, A5
	- Briefly write about the major crisis in Venezuela.	November 20th	30 min 1 hr	A4, B2, B3, B5
	- Online Research and Citing: Reasons for Migrating to TT.	November 21st-22nd	45 min 1 hr	A1, A2, A3, A5
	- Writing about reasons for migrants heading to TT.	November 22nd	1 hr 2 hr	A4, B1, B2, B3, B5, C1, C2
	- Online Research and Citing: Refugee and Common Routes from Venezuela to Trinidad.	November 22nd-23rd	30 min 1 hr	A1, A2, A3, A5
	- Describing the routes migrants take from Venezuela to TT.	November 22nd-23rd	45 min 2 hr	A4, B1, B2, B3, C1, C2
	- Apply images and organize across papers about research.	November 23rd	30 min	C3	The amount of time dedicated to the research and analysis for this project was unexpected, too much was spent on that while this remained disregarded because of so.
	- Writing an introduction for the paper's first part based on research.	November 23rd	30 min 20 min	B2, B3, B4, B5, C1, C2
Development of First Interview Questions	- Use gathered Research to generate 5-10 questions about the topic.	November 24th	20 min 10 min	A1, D1, D5
	- Select three of the optimal questions from the list,	November 24th	30 min 30 min	D1, D5	Choosing several questions out of a bunch and depending on the social

Research Main Issues (%)	introduction to the paper.	January 11th	20 min
	- Develop a thesis statement based on the introduction.	December 1st	20 min 5 min	B1, B2, B3, B4, C1, C2
	- Continue researching two other main issues significantly.	December 3rd-4th	1 hr 30 min 4 hr	A1, A2, A5
	- Complete analysis about the two main issues.	December 4th	2 hrs 3 hr	A4, B1, B2, B3
	- Add images and data, while ensuring the paper follows a desired structure by this time.	December 4th-5th	45 min	C3	Images were never added in the paper. As addressed, the sincere and unexpected amount of time that was spent on the paper overwhelmed me and led me to disregard this step. For example, how continuing research would usually take over 2 hours per issue and writing analysis would be almost just as long considering the broad research that had to be conducted.
Start and Report Interviews	- Come in contact with those available for interviews.	December 5th	30 min No Time, Per Person	D2, D3	More of a step that happens at the spot rather than taking time, contacting one by one would take days.
	- Interview 1-3 people, take notes during the interviews.	December 6th-7th	1 hr Avg. Interview around 25 min	D1, D2, D3, D5
	- Interview rest of people contacted.	December 7th-8th	1 hr Avg. Interview around 25 min	D1, D2, D3, D5
	- Add quotations and information about interviews in respective sections.	December 8th	2 hrs 2 hrs	A4, D4	This step was done right after interviews were being conducted. It was done to support some arguments on the paper and make them stronger while also using them to create singular arguments.
Finish Research and Analysis of last Issues (3/3)	- Research two last main issues of Venezuelans in Trinidad.	December 9th-10th	1 hr 30 min 3 hrs	A1, A2, A3, A5
	- Make final analysis on the two issues.	December 10th-11th	2 hrs 2 hrs	B1, B2, B3, B5
	- Properly structure the paper, with final images	December 11th	45 min 40 min	C1, C2, C3

	based on multiple factors.				positions of the interviewees. Questions were scrapped but not selected. There was a set of questions per each interviewee prior to the meetings.
Research Main Problems in TT (%)	- Research to find the most interesting, and objective issues to outline them on a list.	November 25th-26th	20 min 10 min	A1, A5
	- Choose to focus heavily on six out of the rest of the issues.	November 26th	20 min <1 min	A1, A5	The issues were simply chosen and there was no list of potential issues that could be covered in the paper, this was to save time and to ignore any need for further decisions.
	- Deep Research on two of the selected list of issues.	November 26th-27th	1 hr 30 min 3 hr	A1, A2, A3, A5	One deep issue was decided to be the deportation and dangerous migration, thus the migration routes were separated as another issue.
	- Write proper analysis based on research	November 27th	2 hrs 2 hr	A4, B1, B2, B3, B5
	- Ensure issues are separated into paragraphs, organized, and logically strengthened with data and imagery.	November 28th	30 min 15 min	B1, B2, C1, C2	Separated into paragraphs based on information, but NO imagery. However, data was added through the use of quotations from individuals of relevance.
Complete a Confirm Interview Questions and the Interviews Themselves	- Develop questions based on deep conduction of research.	November 28th-29th	1 hr 30 min 30 min	D1, D5
	- Separate or replicate questions into which individuals based on their social position should answer each (Student, Ambassador, etc).	November 29th	20 min 15 min	D1, D3, D5	Separated by adult and student, male and female, and not really by position. No students were asked to interview in the end, but in reality all of the interviewees were somewhat different personally and in their occupations. They allowed for a lot of variety in my paper.
	- Organize contracts that will be sent to Interviewees to ensure their privacy and social concerns.	November 29th-30th	40 min 25 min	D1, D5
	- Find and write potential interviewees, as well as organizing the questions asked for each one.	November 30th - December 1st	1 hr 15 min	D1, D2, D3, D5	The interviewees were already in mind for a long time, and my mother helped me contact them considering her high social connections with Venezuelans around the country.
Establish an overall Paper Introduction	- Make brief research on the other issues as a reminder for the introduction.	November 30th - December 1st	15 min	B4	No memorization was really made, revising the topic for such a long time had given me an idea of it.
	- Write an overall	December 1st	1 hr	B4, C1, C2 and data being applied in an organized manner.

Conclude Paper	- Based on all research made, organize a proper conclusion that highlights the significance of the topic.	December 12th	1 hr 45 min	B4, B5
	- Ensure the use of proper punctuation and grammar on the entire document.	December 12th-13th	20 min 25 min	C2	Some parts were revised through quick reading, but besides that nothing really changed in grammar at all considering it was being done as the paper was in process.
	- Read other professional, successful research papers to ensure paper follows similar structure	December 13th	15 min	B4, B5, C1, C2	This step was done already during the brainstorming and I was already determined to have completed the paper once done. In fact, the amount of time spent on the paper had overwhelmed me to levels where I did not bother doing this step.
	- Determine if all sources follow the same format (MLA, APA), and are in proper organization.	December 13th	10 min 2 hr	A3	The online citations I used for this project were initially applied as links below the paper, although they were later all cited in alphabetical order. Once the paper was complete, Noodletools was used upon each of the links to convert them into actual citations.
	- Check if there is a variety between primary and secondary sources	December 13th	20 min <1 min	A2	There wasn't much variety, but sources were still checked to their entirety and even revised thanks through Noodletools' statistics option for the types of sources used for one project.
Search and Publish on Website	- Make sure the interview contracts give privacy to the respondents on the paper based on their responses.	December 13th	10 min	D1, D4	Interview Contracts never sent, simply asked them how they preferred to be referred to during the meeting. A contract was made prior, but its formality for a simple interview made it so it became a scrapped idea.
	- Find and contact a handful of popular Trinidadian Websites that publish reports	December 14th	45 min	C4, C5	Trinidadian websites were limited, and they didn't respond, like the University of West Indies. However, more international and overall research paper websites did allow the publishing of the paper. (More Below)
	- Select one out of the handful of websites that accept and paper.	January 6th	1 hr <1 min	C4, C5	Academia.edu and SSRN were TWO websites that digitally and automatically allowed me to publish my paper on their sites publicly.
	- Publish the paper (Submit Product)	January 6th	20 min 20 min	C4, C5

B: APPLYING SKILLS

B.1: Research Skills

Information Literacy:

My project's foundation, development, and finalization was all constructed through the development of my research skills as an IB learner. Research had been done primarily in the google browser, and I could have used Currency, Relevance, Authority, Accuracy and Purpose (CRAAP) testing. However, for the amount of sources that I aimed to source, evaluating every source through this method would be extremely time-draining. Nevertheless, I resorted to its foundations by checking that every source had a name (or was made by a prestigious organization), a date, a link, a website, essentially all the elements in making MLA or APA format sources.

(F19. Example of Sources used)

(F19) This creation of these properly formatted sources through the Noodletools online formatter, as well as being able to differentiate between primary and secondary as source #59 shows differences compared to source #60-62 only proved the enhancement of my research skills as well as the mass amount of citations that had to be repeated and thus allowed me to develop my long-term memory in remembering how to format sources without needing such tools.

When incorporating information from interviews to my paper, I learned how to use the NoodleTools digital app to create citations for my paper as shown in (F19) while also making connections between various sources of information like physical interviews with video speeches.

(F20. An extract from my research paper, with the yellow highlight showing a response from an interview)

(F20) These connections that I made among different sources within the same paragraph allowed me to expand upon the ideas and to make them more powerful through my analysis. I reported results by processing these sources of data and thus created solutions for my paper to present to the audience in order to express the message further thanks to the research made.

Media Literacy:

Within my paper, I am able to use information from a variety of sources with different voices towards the general topic. Voices and quotes come from activists, politicians, and witnesses.

"Migrants, particularly those who are unregistered run the risk of being paid below the minimum wage." (The Trinidad Express) These words come from Andreina Briceño Ventura-Brown of La Casita Hispanic Cultural Center at Arima. There is exploitation against the vulnerability of undocumented migrants when it comes to being paid for their efforts at their employment. The Trinidad and Tobago Ministry of Labour indicated in their announcement of (F21. An extract of my research paper conveying the words of an activist in quotation marks compared with the act of the T&T Ministry of Labor)

(F21) In this example, I made a conclusion to a quote only to add another piece of evidence of a Trinidadian Ministry to show the two sides within the same crisis. I was aware of the different viewpoints in the media of my research, although I believed I used that to create my own opinions, which were more centered on the Venezuelans rather than the Trinidadians themselves. Regardless, I was able to understand the weight of the situations based on their dates and the individuals that provided the evidence, which helped me make my conclusions for my analysis.

B.2: Thinking Skills

Critical Thinking:

The whole analysis of my paper was centered around my ability to think critically upon information; the interpretation of data. In most if not all body paragraphs of my paper, I had followed a structure where I analyzed presented evidence. Like how (F20) presents, based on a primary and secondary source, I had made a conclusion about the overall success of the provision of amnesty to the Venezuelan migrants and refugees in Trinidad in terms of the times of their arrival.

59. Ventura-Brown, Andreina Briceño. Personal interview with the author. 18 Jan. 2025.
60. Wilson, Sascha. "Coast Guard on Shooting of Venezuelan Pirogue: We Were Acting in Self Defence." Trinidad and Tobago Guardian, 5 Feb. 2022.
www.guardian.co.tt/news/coast-guard-on-shooting-of-venezuelan-pirogue-6.2.1451450.5610fb6f1c
61. "Work Permit Exemption for Registered Venezuelans Extended to Dec 2025." CNC3, 5 Nov. 2024.
www.cnc3.co.tt/work-permit-exemption-for-registered-venezuelans-extended-to-dec-2025/
62. Zepa, Fabiola. "Venezuela's Oil Production Plunges to Lowest Level Since 1945." Bloomberg, 12 June 2020.
www.bloomberg.com/news/articles/2020-06-12/venezuela-s-oil-production-plunges-to-lowest-level-since-1945?sr=vs&VDP0

Former Prime Minister of Trinidad and Tobago, Keith Rowley. 16,500 Venezuelans were thus able to register for amnesty this same year. "This has been renovated year through year," says Amanda Solano, a protection officer in the Trinidad and Tobago UNHCR, "This Registration Framework is a very good practice. It's a very positive act by the state to establish protection for the Venezuelan people." While successful, amnesty was not provided for those who came after the period of registration or even those who arrived at that time but weren't allowed for unknown reasons.

(F22-23. Extracts where the highlighted texts show rhetorical questions based on evidence regarding the issues suffered by Venezuelans.

In my research paper, I evaluate and create arguments against the treatment of Venezuelans in Trinidad and Tobago. (F22-23) These questions came out of the thinking from pieces of evidence and they are directed to the audience, creating an effective argument that sympathizes with the migrants in the crisis. It expresses my ability to test conclusions and to address the issue at broad levels to communicate the severity of the issue. Conclusive paragraphs were also made by the end of each header, or topic, to express the evaluation of evidence and the impact that can be created from it through critical analysis and thinking.

bosses in their jobs in terms of how well they are paid. A primary reason for why they left Venezuela was because of the lower wages they received in that country. What point is there to stay when wages will be the same or even worse than the place you left?

against Maduro and end up persecuted as their voices are denied. What options do they have? All

1	Trinidad and Tobago
2	Dangers of Migration
3	Deadly Routes
4	Violations through Dep...
5	Xenophobia and Trafficki...
6	Human & Sex Trafficking
7	Xenophobic Accusatio...
8	Mutual Economic Growth
9	Employment Opportuni...
10	Under Minimum Wage
11	Access to Human Rights
12	Accessibility to Health
13	Absence of an Education
14	Conclusion
15	References

Another way I applied critical thinking was the way I learned how to use google docs with more effectiveness. I identified the challenge of creating a mass research paper within the same document would make me have to scroll up and down mindlessly in order to add links for references, add interesting additional information found on previous sections, and fix grammatical errors or verify quotations.

(F24. Tabs corresponding to the headers in the document that allow for faster navigation across the research paper.)

(F24) Thanks to google docs' option to have tabs for each header, this allowed me to have an easier time with this project knowing that I could go from top to bottom and vice versa with a single click rather than scrolling through seconds of information. Applying this demonstrated my identification of obstacles and challenges along the way and how I addressed them through the proposition of solutions thanks to the features presented to me. I am even applying it to this report full-on knowing how it can help me move around longer documents with more ease considering I am a student who applies quantitative results for his assignments.

Of course, I evaluated evidence throughout the document incredibly frequently, which is the repetition of my critical thinking. However, in my abstract and conclusion, they have seen changes, especially the abstract, thanks to the evaluation of evidence and the drawing of reasonable conclusions and summaries of mass information.

(F25. An extract of a paragraph part of my paper's conclusion. It highlights the conclusive parts of the paragraph) governments, and locals have contributed to the arrival of these individuals. It is no simple task to maintain control when thousands of people both legally and illegally are arriving to a pair of small islands within one year. Their integration was inevitable to have several issues, which is also the case for multiple countries that receive them like Colombia. Despite this, it is unacceptable to treat individuals who fled from deadly situations like that.

As I mentioned my research skills, I identified the bias that existed in my work with the purpose to bring more awareness to the issue. (F25) However, based on the several and powerful aspects that I identified and analyzed in my document, I made a conclusion supporting them based on the difficulty of the situation that was imposed on them while also including another conclusion about their needs to improve on how they address the arrival of Venezuelan migrants. Based on all of my information, I made generalizations from evidence and analysis that showed my dedication to my learning goal.

B.3: Self-Management Skills

Organization:

While every single one of my tasks in my plan (F15-18), including short and long term, were past their respective due dates, I had been able to catch up with such a massive amount of work in the month of January. To do this, my supervisor had guided me on the use of the google calendar app in my phone to mark tasks, assignments, and time I should spend to prepare for any of these.

(F26. Tasks list and time ranges for assignment working and studying periods, including time dedicated to my research paper)

(F26) This digital application allowed me to set long and short term goals for assignments when time was pressuring me with various things to do. There were tests,

JANUARY 19 - 25
SUN 19	Study Chem 08:30 - 10:00
	Personal Project 10:15 - 13:15
	Study Math 13:30 - 15:30
	Personal Project 16:00 - 19:00
	Study (Chem/Math) 19:15 - 21:45
MON 20	Study Chem 17:00 - 19:00
	Study Math 19:30 - 21:00
	Study Chem

formative and summative assessments within weeks and using this app allowed me to organize my time more effectively while also being able to work on my personal project. Setting these deadlines and following them diligently has shown greater organizational skills that I have ever applied before in my academic career. This approach to organize my work showed growth in my self-management skills in order to address and evaluate work based on its difficulty, importance, time, and due date.

When working on my project, I had to set more realistic goals in terms of quantity and quality considering the amount of information that I could pour into the paper and the time constraints that I suffered from prolonging the plan's deadlines for too long. Once I began to notice patterns with the way I organized the topics within my project (F24), I saw the pattern of one overall topic cut in half by two major topics involving the Venezuelans in Trinidad and Tobago. For example, how "Mutual Economic Growth" was split into "Economic Opportunities" and "Under Minimum Wage" It maintained a logical system of how quantity was dispersed throughout my research paper. This pattern was applied five times and it allowed me to see the necessity to not add more or less to it in order to assure the organization of this extensive academic paper.

There was an instance where I wanted to have "Access to HealthCare" and "Access to Education" as separate overall topics. However, considering strong time constraints and to set restrictions based on these issues, I had combined both to create the overall topic of "Access to Human Rights". While this showed brief critical thinking skills considering how I interpreted a solution for an issue, the purpose of it inclined further with my self-management skills seeing a need to achieve goals at a certain point. There were also incredibly important topics that could've been addressed like the impact of Venezuelans on rising crime rates or general human trafficking and not just sex trafficking. However, by following the one split into two patterns and the need to finish the research paper while not going too deeply on certain topics demonstrated the management skills through the application of strategies and constraints by following a plan that guaranteed excellence.

(F27. Above: Word Count for Access to HealthCare part, F28. Below: Word Count for Absence of an Education part)

(F27-28) As mentioned above, my paper addressed a need to organize information equally to create similar evaluations of issues and thus provoke emotions of similarity across one another. This happened with the major topics within an overall topic in my research paper. They were weighted as if both topics were placed in a balance scale; to organize complex information and manage my time effectively.

Through all of these methods, I was able to control myself, someone who likes to bring new ideas to the table, by applying new strategies to leverage the time I had created for myself when working on this project.

B.4: Communication Skills

Communication:

When participating in interviews, there were various specific ATL skills applied that allowed me to understand and incorporate information into my research paper. I had to plan questions for each of the interviewees that I was going to address days prior to the interviews. All of the interviews were in Spanish. This difference in speaking to communicate to this specific audience is a skill that I relied heavily on when conducting these interviews that were crucial for documenting research on my paper. Thus, this difference showed my intercultural communication and understanding considering my awareness of the details surrounding the individuals that I would interview.

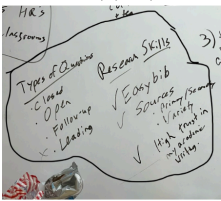

(F29. An Apple Notes with a list of Interview Questions in Spanish for each Interviewee)

Considering that many of my interviewees were people that my parents knew personally, I had received help from my father to write questions per individual, questions that were determined by the position, age, and overall knowledge that was initially had of that interviewee. This showed the appropriate form of writing for different purposes and audiences. (F29) For instance, how the "ANCUR", or the "Alto Comisionado de las Naciones Unidas para los Refugiados" (United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, UNHCR) is in a question towards Amanda Solano, who collaborates with the organization within Trinidad and highly specializes in the case.

Amanda Solano
Alto Comisionado de las Naciones Unidas para los Refugiados ¿Cuáles considera que son las principales razones por las cuales ciudadanos venezolanos migran a Trinidad?
Se tienen algunos estimados de cuantos venezolanos migran anualmente a Trinidad?
Cuáles son las principales necesidades que enfrentan los refugiados venezolanos ¿Qué tipo de apoyo otorga el ACNUR a los refugiados en Trinidad? Hay algunas particularidades o necesidades específicas de los refugiados de Venezuela?
Samuel López
¿Dónde vivía en Venezuela? (Ciudad, Estado)
¿De qué clase era financieramente en su país de origen?
¿Puede describir la razón principal por su salida de Venezuela?
¿Tomó una educación, hasta qué nivel?
¿Qué método de transporte tomó para llegar a Trinidad por primera vez?
¿Además de su hermano, hay otros familiares que viajaron con usted?
¿A qué año llegó a Trinidad?
¿Hay historias que pueda informar donde se ha sentido amenazado por los locales?
¿Cómo consiguió el trabajo que tiene ahora, qué dificultades tuvo que pasar?
¿Cuál era su trabajo en Venezuela? ¿Siente que tiene suficiente para sostenerse?
¿Ha tenido acceso a servicios de salud: (Medicación, tratamientos, etc)?
¿Ha tenido experiencias de xenofobia en Trinidad?
¿Ha mejorado o empeorado durante los años?
¿Cómo un entrenador y un deportista, siente que ha sido discriminado o perjudicado en eventos de deportes como partidos o viajes?
¿Que historias específicas puede contar sobre su experiencia general en las islas?

Not to mention, several of these questions were created based on information that I had gathered from the research paper prior to working on the interviews. I made inferences and drew conclusions thanks to research when developing these questions that had the purpose to receive expansive and accurate information on the topic I was investigating.

(F30. Meeting Report with Supervisor involving the creation of questions for Interviews)

Meeting 2	November 15th 2024	- To make criterion A a checklist that ensures all of the research has its necessities. - Determine the closed, open-ended, follow-up and leading questions for interviews. Open-ended questions should be prioritized. Leading questions shouldn't be used at all or very often. Learn more about these types of questions. - Questions are important to consider for gathering information that can be essential to answer unanswered concerns to make the research paper more qualified, quantified, and unique. - The use of a variety of sources allows the paper to be more accurate, and trustworthy to be read by audiences as the paper is planned to be published. 	Student: Santiago Aguilera Supervisor: Chad Schwabewerow
-----------	--------------------	---	---

(F30) To be able to receive these kinds of answers, my supervisor and I had arranged a meeting involving the creation of these questions and how they had to be formatted to leverage the handful of interviews I was offered. Through this negotiation of ideas between a teacher, we saw the need to maximize open-ended questions, or questions that had expansive answers, in order to receive answers that were long enough to crucially contribute to my research paper. Closed-ended questions, which ended with “Yes or No” or very short, more individual answers were avoided further while follow up and lead questions were more normal to have. Learning about these kinds of questions and to apply them in certain scenarios allowed me to generate these questions that helped me output crucial information on my research paper.

Title	Time	A
Alejandra Entrevista	...	16:49
Amanda Entrevista	...	35:39
E-Andreina 1	...	8:00
E-Andreina 2	...	31:00
Mariana Entrevista	...	9:04
Samuel Entrevista	...	28:35

(F31. A list of voice recordings per interview with the time per interview, “Entrevista” means Interview)

(F31) Interviews were recorded through the voice memos application and sent to my laptop for me to hear to interpret the data correctly in the manner that I translate from Spanish to English accurately and organize information in its respective position within the research paper. For instance, during the interview with Amanda, she had said this directly in Spanish: “Mientras tanto, para los niños que no están estudiando tanto ACNUR como UNICEF apoyamos una plataforma virtual que se llama ‘Equal Place’ en el cual los niños- algunos niños pueden estudiar. Sin embargo, esta plataforma no recibe acreditación en la escuela primaria. Entonces, esto es uno de los retos y razones por las que queremos que todos puedan ingresar al sistema de educación nacional.”

(F32. An extract of my research paper where the highlighted part demonstrate the translation of the interviewee’s response)

(F32) In my paper, these long translations and paraphrases had not been that consistent, although they were applied in several cases to ensure validation and further incorporation of media and views towards the topic rather than plain explanations of their responses. Communication skills came from the organization and structuring of these quotations and data coming from the interviews in Spanish, which showed growth in the manner I generated ideas to formulate questions while applying information out of conversations and thus gaining knowledge and approaching my learning goal of to understand the phenomena that is Venezuelan immigration and integration to Trinidad and Tobago.

“Meanwhile, for the students that aren’t studying in a formal education,” Continued Amanda Solano of the Trinidad and Tobago UNHCR, “us UNHCR and UNICEF provide support for a virtual platform called ‘Equal Place’, where some children can study. However, this platform does not credit primary school, which is one of the challenges so everybody can get into a national system of education.” The option of a virtual school has become available for the

C: REFLECTING

C.1: Project Reflection

Personal Impact & Development:

Working on my Research Paper involving this topic has not just improved my research and self-management skills by up a notch, but also has allowed me to finally turn around and see the reality behind what I could only imagine for these last 7 to 8 years of feeling the presence of this world-wide crisis under my radar. Learning about the migrant experiences and analyzing the crisis within this country has allowed me to visualize all of the social topics that connect with these people’s struggles besides the issues in their own countries. From emotionally connecting from the online video with the desperate and poor mother struggling to maintain her baby’s health back in 2019 to visualizing people humbly positioned on the streets of Colombia, Panama, and Trinidad through their cardboard letters and small, local businesses to now respecting and understanding the variety of consequences they endured including the inhumane crimes like human trafficking, limited access to HealthCare and Education, exploitation of their employment via their salaries, and the xenophobia against them, with all of these topics recorded and supported with advanced data, key individuals like activists, politicians, and interviewees, and several news articles.

For this reason, my learning goal was achieved by a landslide thanks to my product being solely dedicated towards creating a research paper. I set out to learn about the crisis in this country involving the largest group of migrants, which was successful and beyond. Personally, I have the emotion that if someone asked me a question involving the crisis, I would be confident enough to answer any question because of how much I covered and analyzed. While working on this project, I was able to see the progress of my learning with my improved questioning during interviews, and applying this knowledge in real life when I was asked to help with potential community service projects. With these new ideas, I am able to persuade my school or area to take a look at this topic and to provide assistance for the exact needs that I know these people are in need of, creating action to make a change.

However, my poor self-management skills extending this project from its presumed completion in early January all the way until February significantly affected the way that I could incorporate other parts of my plan into the project. Images, enhanced vocabulary, and other topics of relevance were all possible if only I had considered maintaining my plan and showing more curiosity to work on my product. Before the project, academic research papers weren't as time-draining and difficult considering the less research I needed to conduct and the more summarized information I could apply, like in my English papers reviewing literature like Lord of the Flies by William Golding, and Othello by Shakespeare. These topics had a more central idea to them, like the symbolism and characters in the first and the themes of manipulation and misogyny in the other. They weren't a compilation of aspects that could've been the length of my research paper.

My product goal was achieved as I successfully published my 42-page paper online and expressed my topic of Venezuelan immigration and integration into Trinidad and Tobago in recent years extensively and at an open perspective. Considering my initial product would be community service projects, I could've never imagined how little I would've learnt compared to this more rigid, relatable, skill-applying, and expansive initiative considering my excellence as a student. This project has helped understand the profound weight of professional research papers and how I can apply the skills and areas for improvement I learnt here to produce works that are more qualifiable and impressive for colleges and for the general public.

Development as an IB Learner:

As an IB Learner, there were several aspects of our profile where I improved thanks to the creation of my product goal:

Inquirer - As an Inquirer, I attained knowledge by learning about a certain topic through intricate research about this topic that strongly resonated with my life. My supervisor asked me what interview was my best, to which I confidently responded was the one with Amanda Solano from the UNHCR. This was because of how I applied my curiosity and learnings from news articles and previous interviews to incorporate into that situation. I was able to speak about my inquiries in these conversations more casually because of my findings about a topic that I had known for a long time.

Thinker - When I understood my situation with time constraints out of my self-management issues, I had to critically think of new ideas like applying a similar word count and time dedicated for each major topic covered on the paper, like how I began to separate main topics into two and distribute equal word count. Furthermore, the decision to apply imagery needed me to decline it based on the time I had left. Connecting different sources to each other repetitively to produce my own information forced me to analyze and make an inference for each idea. I was able to make up for my failures in self-management through quick working and applying initiatives like the ones listed without holding myself back.

Communicator - I grew as a communicator considering expressing a second language with individuals of another culture to gather information for my research paper to grow closer to the topic I was investigating. This was done with five different people with different positions that helped me listen to the perspectives of others, like how Andreina (also an activist for gender-based violence in Trinidad) delved further into the crimes done against the Venezuelans while Solano of the UNHCR was more into the initiatives taken by her organization to support the refugees. Collaborating with people from different cultural backgrounds and perspectives has allowed me to become more confident to speak about topics like these in a more adapted language and style.

Open-Minded - By using various sources of information, like local news articles, the interviews, and videos, I collected information from a range of point of views involving the issue, where I was able to shape my own perspective through the influence of others and was able to be like a spectator. Like how activist Yesenia Gonzalez protested against the lack of education for the thousands of migrant children to politician Avery Brown's exclamation over the restriction and the law of maintaining education to only a few Venezuelans. My paper incorporated both voices and learned to respect both sides in some of its more later parts compared to the more one-sided parts involving the struggles of Venezuelans through xenophobia, violence, and their deportations in Trinidad and Tobago.

Grading and Criteria	Research (Criterion A)	Analysis (Criterion B)	Communication (Criterion C)	Interviews (Criterion D)
1-2 Limited	A1. Research needs to be better applied, sources only add up to less than 5. This creates a report that is limited to ideas and likely plagiarized. A2. Research only implements secondary sources, proving the overreliance on subjective ideas. A3. Most if not all Bibliography is poorly formatted in an unorganized structure, while a list of important elements in sources like authors and dates do miss out a majority of the time. A4. The paper barely mentions or remarks on any of its sources across the report, clearly demonstrating limited respect towards the information received. A5. Sources belong from a variety of time periods and do not remain on a specific one, delivering a limited message to the audience.	B1. Research Paper only concentrates on 1-2 problems relating to Venezuelan migration to Trinidad. This shows limitations in learning the true details behind this significant topic. B2. Only one side of the whole phenomena is seen, whether it's the Trinidadians or the Venezuelans. There is a limited amount of respect for one of these two sides. B3. The paper is limited to only outlining evidence gathered, without giving any sort of logical statement, remark, or explanation throughout most evidence within the research report. B4. The paper has introductions and conclusions that are irrelevant and short-written, lacking any logical interpretation of the topic. They both share the same purpose and don't make it successful in attracting readers to the topic. B5. The paper is limited to less than 1000 words, which is a limited amount that briefly outlines and explains the issues.	C1. Paper has an introduction, a one-paragraph body, and a conclusion. This one paragraph is filled with differing information and creates poor, unorganized work. C2. Report applies basic phenomena as seen, whether it's clear enough and attracts enough viewers. C3. Under 3 pieces of media are applied into the project, developing a project that severely lacks visuals and data, which are critical for the paper to grab attention. C4. The report is not published. It is maintained as a paper that limits attention and is not used to achieve its grand purpose. C5. The public isn't as satisfied with the paper based on its message and text, showing reviews and making comments that imply the paper is limited on satisfying the readers.	D1. Interviews have straight-forward questions that were not planned with research. All Questions are also repeated in every interview regardless of the individuals and are very short in amount. D2. Interviews are only made with 1 or 2 individuals, really limiting the amount of voices. D3. Only one group, such as students, workers, support centers, are given a voice in interviews. D4. The information received from interviews is barely applied, to the point where this limitation did not prove their usefulness. D5. All questions are leading questions, which lead to a project that has too much specified information and likely bias.

3-4 Adequate	A1. The source amount lies between 5-20, providing an adequate number of sources, and creating a report that relies on an average number of ideas. A2. Research mostly applies secondary sources, although there is bare evidence derived from primary sources, with around 10% of sources being primary. A3. Research is adequately structured in the bibliography, while having a handful of sources, about 20%, in complete detail (name, date, publisher...), showing further accuracy. A4. The paper does spend 5 occasions respecting and mentioning the sources of information. This makes it adequately clear that research was made from reliable sources. A5. Research is from times that go at least under 10 years, which is of recent times, managing to develop an adequately accurate report based on time.	B1. Report conducts research on 3-4 problems relating to the crisis of Venezuelan migration to Trinidad. An adequate amount of research was clearly conducted. B2. Research paper acknowledges views from both sides, although remains showing bias by preferring one over the other while not delving deeper into the individuals and their roles themselves. B3. The report adequately remarks and mostly offers logical statements about evidence. There is a bare connection between explanations, the evidence, and the points. B4. The report produces an introduction that slightly brings attention to the rest of the topic, and produces a conclusion that serves as a brief summary to all of the points analyzed in the document. B5. The report only passes a word count of 3,000 words, an adequate amount to outline and explain the issues at hand.	C1. The paper adequately separates itself in a variety of paragraphs, with one for an introduction, three for the body, and one for the conclusion. It shows that the paper organizes information by a respectable amount. C2. Vocabulary is inspired by the various sources researched, although retains basic wording and punctuation in the long-term. C3. 10 pieces of media are applied to the project, where it is clear enough and attracts enough viewers. C4. Report is published but only made aware of in the school's campus and websites, it grabs attention from students, teachers, and parents, although limited in that and barely achieves its goal. C5. The paper receives some average or mixed reviews from the public, which imply the paper adequately satisfies or angers some of the audiences in the paper.	D1. There is an adequate amount of research conducted for each question, although still not sufficiently planned. Questions go up to 5, and they barely vary between each individual interview. D2. Interviews are conducted with 3 people, showing slight amounts of people partaking in responding to questions for the research paper. D3. There is variety in the amount of people interviewed, with two groups being present at most. This allows for many views to be evident. D4. The information from interviews is vaguely applied, but given short statements as analysis, which prove adequate usefulness. Interviews are only applied about 3 times. D5. The majority of questions are leading, although there is an adequate amount of open-ended and closed questions. This allows for the inclusion of simple, objective answers.
--------------	--	---	---	--

5-6 Substantial	A1. Research derives from 21-40 sources, creating a project that flourishes with a substantial number of ideas applied to a well-made project. A2. Research creates a closer mix between Primary and Secondary sources with a bare difference. Approximately 25% of sources are primary, showing the large contribution of original ideas to the product. A3. The bibliography has research sources labeled, with between 40%-60% pieces being complete with detail, showing a proper list of accurate sources to assist on the research paper. Bibliography is formatted properly thanks to italics and underlines. A4. The research report substantially respects its sources, with about 10 research sources being mentioned, and even briefly explained a points to make the audience aware of what reliable source they read this on. A5. Sources do not exceed 5 years of age for a majority of the time, crafting a sufficiently accurate paper in terms of relevance.	B1. The report goes up to expansively analyze 8 of the most notable problems of Venezuelan migration to TT. It's substantial enough to create a solid, well-researched report. B2. Research paper successfully explains an objective piece of work. However, it doesn't consider the opinions and perspectives of differing groups as sufficiently. B3. Explanations towards evidence are expansive and do make connections with the overall topic, while also responding to other evidence within the same explanations. B4. The introduction answers a few initial questions one would have about the topic, as well as explaining the paper. The conclusion sufficiently analyzes the points discussed, the evidence presented, and ensures that the purpose of the paper is achieved at slightest. B5. The paper sufficiently passes a word count of 7,000 words, which should be detailed enough to explain and analyze all of the issues remarked on the paper.	C1. The paper is sufficiently separated into several paragraphs, where the introduction goes for two, the body paragraph for five, and the conclusion for two. This is organized enough to separate information. C2. Vocabulary applied is rich, and heavily inspired from the sources applied. Basic words are attempted to be re-imagined with more professional vocabulary to add more weight into the topic. C3. Media goes up to about 20 total, producing a project that is properly factual and well-developed in communicating evidence. C4. Project is published on a website that is viewed by people from Trinidad. It is capable of being viewed by others and develops minor relevance. C5. The paper receives proper and basic reviews that show satisfied readers, which defines the paper as one that is sufficiently accomplished when it comes to giving detail and has audiences that somewhat agree.	D1. Research is substantially made to back up 8 questions that are genuinely necessary as primary sources of information. Some questions retain quite some similarity between each interview. D2. Interviews are conducted with 5 different individuals, which allow for the project to have enough views towards the issues regarding this topic. D3. Three different groups of individuals are interviewed to create views towards different sides of the topic. D4. Research from these primary sources is applied and used for explanations on 5 occasions. This is substantial in creating implications to support data and information. D5. Half the questions are open-ended, with the rest being a share between closed, follow up, and leading questions.
-----------------	---	---	--	--

7-8 Excellent	A1. Amount of Ideas flourishes from over 41 sources, proving the creation of an excellent project with several ideas that exceed expectations. A2. Research develops an excellent mix of Primary and Secondary sources, with between 40%-60% of sources of information deriving from original ideas. A3. Over 40% of the bibliography ensures that names, dates, and publishers are specified to confirm the knowledge to effectively research reliable sources with excellence. Not only is it properly formatted, but bibliography is also in alphabetical order, establishing a sense of order. A4. The source respects the information received, by giving a proper statement for over 11 sources of information gathered, which mentions nearly every source researched across the text, proving the paper's reliability and use of research further to make it appear as a factual piece of information. A5. The source applies to sources that are mostly under 3 years of age, which allows for the problem to have very among accuracy and relevance to the paper's topic of a modern problem.	B1. The report excellently analyzes a problem or more to demonstrate an insightful understanding of the significant issues of Venezuelan migration in Trinidad and Tobago. B2. The research paper goes towards an absolute objective approach by remarking and analyzing views each based on the individuals where they came from. It creates an insightful, reliable and excellent analysis of the perspective of those involved in this topic. B3. Explanations are well-analyzed, and excellently compare data and evidence to each other to develop factual text that properly underscores the significance of the topic. B4. An introduction is structured in a way where it provides a factual analysis of the report that grabs the attention of readers by answering as many initial concerns about the topic, and outlining the public's most known parts about the topic. The conclusion summarizes and excellently sums up information to educate readers about the significance and why it should be further dedicated towards the Trinidadian people. B5. The paper exceeds an amount of 10,000 words, with all of the issues explained, analyzed, and concluded in expansion and fully answering the message.	C1. The Paper is separated into several paragraphs, with three or more for an introduction, then dedicated to organizing the paragraphs one by another based on the most to least important. Conclusion also has over three paragraphs. It is excellently structured where it keeps the reader interested. C2. Vocabulary in research papers is professional, and highly inspired by sources. It is clear that there are words applied that were never known before, and there is a bare trace of basic language being applied. C3. Media goes beyond 30, proving the dense research conducted and how much attention the report will grab from more pieces of media thanks to sources. C4. The project is published in a website that is highly known in Trinidad, where people from TT visit it every day and it is accessible. In fact, if one were to search "The Phenomena of Venezuelan Migration to Trinidad and Tobago", it would be one of the top choices. C5. The paper manages to convince its readers to agree and acknowledge the topic based on their majority positive reviews, which infers that the goal of the paper was achieved.	D1. Research is mostly conducted behind each question, where the most troubling concerns about the topic being part of the questions to get 10 questions that are highly effective for the report. Similarity between questions is undetectable. D2. Over 7 individuals are interviewed to prove the project's factual status considering this is a broad number of individuals that all have different views. D3. Over 4 different groups of individuals are interviewed for this project. This broadens views even further and ensures that everybody is given a voice to support a factual report. D4. Most if not all information from each source is applied in the report, where it is able to create statistics if a question is requested to make conclusions about certain sides of the topic. It is able to create more data to develop highly realistic and objective interpretations relating to the topic. D5. Interviews have one if not zero leading questions in total each. Most questions are Open-ended, with both closed and follow-up questions being present as well, allowing useful and objective responses to be applied into the paper.
---------------	---	---	---	---

C.2: Product Evaluation

(From left top to bottom: F33. A reviewed 1-2, the Limited section grading of my criteria, F34. 3-4, revised Adequate section, F35. 5-6, revised Substantial section, F36. 7-8, revised excellence section)

Criteria A. Research - 7:

I gave myself a 7 here because throughout all strands except A2, I reached the point of excellence and was able to apply sources that were greatly and mostly reliable and up-to-date. The research project showed evidence in nearly every paragraph and I demonstrated taking maximum advantage of each of the sources that I used for this project rather than only labeling a quote.

Strengths: (F36)

A.1 = 7-8: Like how (F19) showed, a total of 62 sources were all extracted from information and it exceeded the 41 that I believed was the minimum for an excellent grade in strand A1. The variety of sources allow for better comparison and extraction of information from various viewpoints and authors that allow for a genuine exploration of the topic.

A.3 = 7-8: All of the sources were applied on the same MLA format through the consistent use of NoodleTools, where all my sources were organized in alphabetical order and applied to my research paper while they all mostly included complete formatting, making my sources are highly reliable. 2 of 3 sources, or 65% of sources were completely formatted, which was slightly more than the minimum of 60% on the excelling section of my criterion.

(F37. Below: An extract displaying a highlight of a source mentioned on the document)

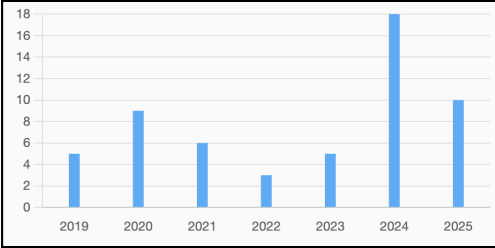

A.4 = 7-8: Sources

were heavily applied and mentioned on my paper, more times than expected. (F37) The Trinidad and Tobago Newsday provided several news articles that were quoted and mentioned in the paper, and this singular website was mentioned 13 times, exceeding the expected 11.

A.5 = 7-8: The entirety of my research was all up-to-date within the range of 5 years, this is already under the 5-6 substantial section of my criteria. However, thanks to noodletools, I was able to see a graphical representation of all the years of my sources and which ones stood out the most.

(F38. NoodleTools Graph informing about the number of sources used and cited on my project (left, y-axis) per year (bottom, x-axis))

(F38) 2024 and 2025 were the two years with the greatest amount of sources in the whole graph, with 2022 and 2023 following along and they added up to 36 sources out of 62. If 31 is half of 62, and I reached this point, it shows how most of my sources were already within this range of time.

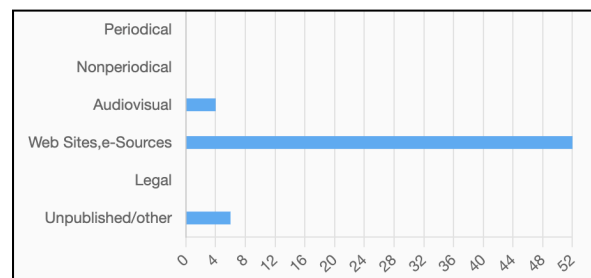

Weaknesses & Areas for Improvement: (F34)

A.2 = 3-4: My paper saw the necessity for a balance between primary and secondary sources in order to extract information from both direct and indirect sources in order to show a clear understanding and exploration of my topic in all aspects.

(F39. A graph showing the different types of sources used for my research paper; x-axis representing amount of sources and y-axis the type of citations).

(F39) For next time, I need to strive to create a stronger balance between my types of sources considering that slightly over 10% of my sources were primary. This will be done through the use of research ATL skills on more intricate and primary sources that help me take perspective on it and not just rely on websites despite how complete they are. There is a lot of room for improvement in terms of the type of research I conduct and how I can create more reliable papers.

Despite my compliments over the quantity of research evaluated on A1, the sources were incredibly repetitive, most of them being from articles and videos involving news. Less of them were more scholarly articles, which suggests the use for more research-based browsers for future research projects to create more reliable sources for the public.

Criteria B, Analysis - 7:

My analysis was the strongest part of my project because of the several researching, thinking, and communication skills that I applied although there was a minor flaw that was less severe than the flaw on the research. For these reasons, I graded myself a 7 as my paper expressed and be a piece of awareness to support Venezuelan migrants in Trinidad and Tobago with success.

Strengths: (F36)

B.1 & B.5 = 7-8: My research covered thousands of words of valuable evidence and analysis in a total of 10 different topics that illustrate their struggles profoundly and create awareness for their situation. In (F24), the different topics are listed on my document tabs where every topic has many pages of information dedicated to it, demonstrating the exploration of the general idea of Venezuelan immigration and integration to Trinidad and Tobago at an expansive rate. This was achieved with a word count that exceeded 10,000 words significantly with a count of 15,000 words. It was greatly expansive and open with the overall topic.

B.3 = 7-8: There is a connection between various pieces of information, as shown in my information literacy skills when I connect responses from my interviews with the websites. (F20) Putting two sources of information together allowed for a comparison of viewpoints and ideas that greatly supported the way two perspectives were reflected and it created a more open space in terms of how I incorporated several pieces of information and connected them to each other.

government. Hence, this research paper serves as a way to allow these individuals to broadly understand the situation and ensure superior quality of life for their migrants and refugees, promising that those human opportunities will be offered to them.

(F40. An extract of my paper's final paragraph at the conclusion where the highlighted part is the ultimate conclusion of my research paper.)

B.4 = 7-8: (F40) On my summaries like my introductions and conclusions, my paper delved into the crisis of the Venezuelans and it was able to express that message until the very end, as the highlighted part suggests. When I wanted to be fully objective, I made a conclusion for a paper knowing that it was quite subjective, expressing my ability to develop conclusions based on what I presented and achieved.

Weaknesses & Areas for Improvement: (F35)

B.2 = 5-6: The minor flaw that I had with my analysis was the sheer passion I began to pour for the Venezuelan peoples and I created a difference between the considerations of the Venezuelans and the Trinidadians. This made my paper somewhat subjective in certain points, and a lot of my analysis defines how the Trinidadians have violated the human rights of the Venezuelans.

(F41. A part where I argue against the human rights offered to the Venezuelans by the Trinidadians) conditions, and while under the law, disregard the sincere amount of trouble Venezuelans go through to reach Trinidad and Tobago and do not respect the human rights refugees deserve.

(F41) There were several instances where my own views towards the issue started to take over when reading the words of activists in secondary sources who shared my own perspective and thus started to see the paper as more of a piece of propaganda and awareness rather than an informational piece to educate individuals about the whole issue. I do take a dive into both perspectives although incline more on my preferred side in a handful of arguments throughout my work.

To improve, I should take perspective on the issue through the viewpoints and not just follow the ideas brought forth by those whom I supported. A more informational perspective would create a more direct and objective source that would allow the audience to see the issue in their own way and not be forced to follow one. My paper's analysis is extremely strong all throughout and I need to use this ability to produce a more reliable source of information others can use for their own research.

Criteria C, Communication - 4:

The weakness of my communication compared to the rest of my criteria was due to time constraints from poor self-management and choices that could've been done better throughout the paper. This especially includes the publishing process of the paper that significantly lowered my grade. To earn an 8, I needed to follow several steps that were scrapped from my plan while ensuring that I took leverage of my time.

Strengths: (F35-36)

C.1 = 7-8: My paper was able to communicate effectively and separate information and arguments between several paragraphs under titles that allowed the audience to know what topic was being discussed (F24). The introduction involved the whole crisis in Venezuela and it went on for several paragraphs, which also went with the profound conclusion where I involved my life with the situation.

(F42. Research Paper published a report, putting an eye on the "White" word as it was supposed to be "While.") the Venezuelan people." White successful, amnesty was not provided for those who came after

C.2 = 5-6: The sources of information allowed me to learn new, related vocabulary, like "Amnesty" or "Exemption" that I incorporated within my document to show my knowledge revolving around this topic. Other than those words, I suggest that for my next paper, I need to amplify my word choice and also spend more time ensuring grammar and words are prepared, as there were some slight issues checked here and there while I read my published report. The release of my paper to the public was rushed, and next time revision must be done which becomes clear when seeing the mistake I did on (F42).

There are various voices in my research paper that are given a parenthetical citation to describe the source and the individual involved with the quotation placed, which credit the source it came from and the person who mentioned said source. (F27) Shows an example of when I credit a citation while including a name to imply who had stated the quote.

Weaknesses & Areas for Improvement: (F33-34)

The paper was published much later than the due date set in my SMART goal set on the start of February 2025, as well as the goal to publish the paper by January of the same year. Instead, it was published around the same time I am writing this report. For this reason, I won't be able to evaluate my paper's success or any comments considering it comes from someone who has not published papers anymore.

(F43. Research Paper details in Academia.edu)

C.3 = 3-4: (F43) Only 5 people (including family members) have viewed the document, suggesting the zero reviews that I've received and the insignificance of the paper on a global scale. It is only available on this website.

Thus, in future research papers, the publishing must take much more planning in order to send it for people to view at a more local level and to spread my message further.

Using plagiarism risks and an excuse, I did not add any images or visual elements to my research paper when in reality I saw the incorporation of imagery in my document as a waste of time considering the pressure I was in. I used heavy amounts of media with quotations, but I lowered my grade due to the lack of impact and readability my paper created from missing images.

To improve, I believe that using another application or tool to write my document could've been used instead of google docs. I could have enhanced my brainstorming research and incorporated CRAAP testing in my project when researching for the best tools to create research papers to create ones that look like the ones that I read online.

Venezuelan Immigration and Integration to Trinidad and Tobago in Recent Years

By Santiago Aguilera

5 Views 42 Pages 1 File

2025, Venezuelan Immigration and Integration to Trinidad and Tobago

Social Sciences Domestic Violence Immigration Venezuela Integration Show more

<https://doi.org/10.913161>

Page numbers: 42

Publication date: 2025

Publication name: Venezuelan Immigration and Integration to Trinidad and Tobago

When visualizing the map of the world, you would find Venezuela, a country popularized for its relevant economy and political crisis. Taking a closer look to the northeast of this country, you can find a small island accompanied by minuscule one compared to this nation; the Caribbean islands of Trinidad and Tobago. The distance between ...

Download PDF

Download Full PDF Package

Translate PDF

Criteria D, Interviews - 6:

My interviews and the preparation behind them were also quite affected by my poor self-management, but they were incredibly beneficial for additional information added into my research paper. I gave myself a 6 because despite the questions being prepared based on research and through formal meetings with my supervisor, I felt that with more efficient self-management, and preparation, I could've interviewed more individuals and all with different viewpoints.

Strengths: (F36)

D.1 = 7-8: Several questions were produced thanks to the research that I had conducted online involving the socio-economic areas where Venezuelans struggled in Trinidad and Tobago. I had made initial questions at the first stage of my research. However, I noticed that with the more research I had, the more questions I could ask comfortably without relying on preparation questions, which is what I had done in the first batch of interviews. It showed how I had advanced in my learning thanks to working on my project.

D.4 = 7-8: Interviews were recorded in order to be able to access information from them at will, which decision had allowed me to enhance translating skills while being able to highly sustain ideas with the incorporation of more primary sources.

D.5 = 7-8: The production of questions was well planned thanks to one formal meeting with my supervisor. I had ensured that the questions I applied to interviewees leveraged answers and thus information applied on my research paper. Most of my questions were open-ended and thus allowed me to apply responses that helped connect more points to each other.

Weaknesses & Areas for Improvement: (F35)

D.2 = 5-6: There were limitations with the amount of individuals that I met for my interviews. Once again, this derived from my poor self-management for this project, and past deadlines becoming more pressuring on me. There were several potential interviewee options open to me yet I never bothered to check all because of too much focus to get the writing done. Only 5 people were formally interviewed, as shown in (F31), and while this is a substantial number, I am aware of the potential that I could've reached with more voices put on my project.

D.3 = 5-6: One thing that could've helped me elevate strand B2 further was the more open perspective to other views rather than the Venezuelan side. Thus, if I had conducted D3 better, this could've been possible and I would've given myself a 7 for Criterion D and an 8 for Criterion B. Ultimately, only interviewing a member of an international organization (UNHCR), the manager of a refugee home, and normal civilians all from Venezuela or supporting their arrival to the islands don't make me think more on the other side. There are only three types of interviewees and it does show some different views, but only the perspectives from those who are all on the same side.

Thus, this only amplifies the need to see a topic to its entirety, from the proposition to the opposition, which would maximize connections and to be able to provide more research as a further reliable source based on the analysis provided.

(F44. Left: Voice Memos App and a list of saved Recordings, F45. Right: Vocaroo Web Recorder from my Laptop)

One of the interviews, E-Andreina 2, was 31 minutes long, but only the first 10 seconds were audible. As a result, all of the information from that meeting had either been memorized or discarded. (F45) The meeting with her was recorded in Vocaroo, which is what I used to record myself speaking in Spanish classes. However, when listening to the recording provided by this web recorder, all the recorded audio had disappeared, leaving me unable to extract any information. (F44) For this incident, I preferred to use the voice memos application on my phone which significantly improved audio quality and the fact that it played long videos.

Thus, for the next time, when recording interviews, I need to be aware of the best tool to use online rather than the most common one I use. A trend that I noticed throughout this project was the constant use of the tools that I already knew to construct the paper, and not the pursuit of superior tools that could've produced a more qualifiable piece of work.

